

ORGANISING YOUR STUDY SPACE

Everyone studies differently, it is important to find a study space that suits you. For some students it may be at the library, a café or lying on your bed. There is no right or wrong place to study, however, most students find it helps if they have:

- A quiet place to study where it is reasonably private and free from interruptions.
- A desk and a comfortable chair.
- A space at home where you can store and easily access study supplies.
- Decide before you start how you want to store your notes, assignments and other course materials. This may be filing trays to organise notes and assignments or folders with page dividers to separate topics.
- A year long wall planner is an excellent way to identify when assignments are due and makes it very clear how much time you have to complete each assignment.
- A computer, if you share a computer negotiate a timetable so it is available when you need it or take note of where the S.I.T. computer labs are and when they are open.
